Light Beings: A very high percentage of your populations is struggling. Most are struggling not because of circumstances beyond their control, but because they are living with much conflict and are not even aware of it. Their thoughts are leading them into a quagmire of confusion, because the present life most are living is contrary to what is needed to grow spiritually and psychologically. They may be creating a life that is not as demanding physically as it once was, but there is no space for expanding in the way that the human entity was created to expand.

The general vibration has increased and most have not adjusted, but have increased their own activity both in mind and body, thinking that was needed to survive, which in actuality is the opposite. As the vibration increases it is even more important for entities to have time to assimilate the information they can access, and to learn to monitor their thoughts and recognize the difference between what their souls are requesting and what their egos are goading them to do. That cannot happen when one is filling every moment of their time with mindless things like technology has created to occupy their minds. That is one of the reasons for the chaos you are feeling and also seeing on your planet. Your religions were not always expansive or good for the masses, but they did give entities the opportunity to look within, and to be still, and touch base with something beyond oneself if they took their religion seriously. Communities developed in such a way that an individual was important, and there was a camaraderie that no longer exists in most areas of your world. Even where it does still exist, there is a rapid diminishment as technology makes its way into those communities.

The connection that was made between entities even two generations ago on your planet was much deeper and more caring than exists today. It is rare to find the kind of relationships that existed in your present day environment because of the way technology has developed and how the monetary system has driven the population to strive for these advances as you see them. We are not saying the technology itself is responsible for the chaos but we are saying that the choices one makes many times removes the sensitivity and ability to sense what another entity might feel or need, due to the emphasis on creating what you think is a better, more livable existence.

The striving for more and more things and for a better life has ultimately created a monster in many ways and much more inequality than ever before. Until there is recognition of what has developed, and still is developing, in the consciousness concerning what is needed to survive, there will continue to be chaos and confusion on your planet. And as we have related before, it all is created due to thought processes that begin very early in an entity's life.

If technology is used correctly, and only when it benefits the soul as well as the physical, and is not the driving force in one's life, it can be used to create a paradise for you. But if it replaces the connections with another soul, or replaces the need to interact with your fellow entities and see the needs and the struggles of others, then it is more detrimental to your growth than it should be. Start within your life and see what is missing that was once very prevalent. You may find that your connection with friends has diminished, working directly with others on a project or an idea is no longer there, and due to technology most of your acquaintances are not even in the proximity of your environment, but are too far away for any physical connection. That leaves a void in your life, because as a human being it is necessary for connections to be made that are meaningful for one to feel they are a part of the total. Isolation is one of the biggest issues of today, and unfortunately most do not recognize it as an issue, because it has become much more commonplace than ever in the history of your planet for one to become self sustained and not feel the need for the companionship and comfort of other entities, but keep them at a distance. There may be many interactions on a daily basis, most via technology, but there is rarely deep conversation or deep connection. One of the greatest ways of expanding and of learning about one's self is by interacting with others. When you look into the soul of another it allows you to observe not only who they are and their actions but allows you to see much more about yourself.

Even in your politics you are seeing a polarization that could not happen if each of the politicians were more in touch with themselves and with those around them. There would be a sensitivity that doesn't exist now, and concern for others would replace the need to always be right. The wide discrepancy with wealth in your country could not exist if there was more empathy and interactions within a community. There has been for many centuries a division, but it has become greater and greater, and entities become less and less aware of their fellow beings. That even extends into the damage being done to the environment on a daily basis. At one time only what was needed to sustain was taken from nature, but now nature is raped on a daily basis, and it is simply not necessary for the existence of the entities on the planet.
